BRITAIN FIRST

LATE November last year Britain First (BF) held it's last regional meeting of the year. The meeting was at an unnamed Hotel in Coventry and according to the BF website was well attended. Not sure if any of the Supp readers are involved with or are members of BF, I personally don't know of any. Hence the decision to hold the meeting in Coventry was probably more based on its central location, rather than any strong Coventry BF support/membership in the area. As most will know BF came into being in 2011 and was launched by Paul Golding who is still the party's chairman to this day.

Those of us who have been around nationalism for more years than we care to remember, will recall Golding from his early days with the BNP. At some point he decided to leave the BNP and formed his own party.

Some BNP members followed suit and joined Golding's fledgling movement.

Now there are many parallels between the BNP and BF, but there are also many differences. The BNP for example concentrated on elections and local politics, where as BF specialised more in direct action and confrontational street activities.

Obviously the adrenalin rush of street activities was popular with the more younger football orientated individuals and the videos that were posted made for interesting and amusing viewing. But in truth there was no end game in these antics other than giving the participants of such events a false sense of achievement.

However, there now seems to be a change of tactics within BF. After many years of trying, BF have finally been granted political status by the electoral commission.

Thus enabling them to stand in elections under the BF banner. It should be noted that registering a political party is a pretty straight forward and simple task, that is unless you are a right wing leaning party. There are many other right wing groups fighting for political status and getting rejected for the most trivial of reasons. Mark Collett's Patriotic Alternative party have been applying for some time with no success.

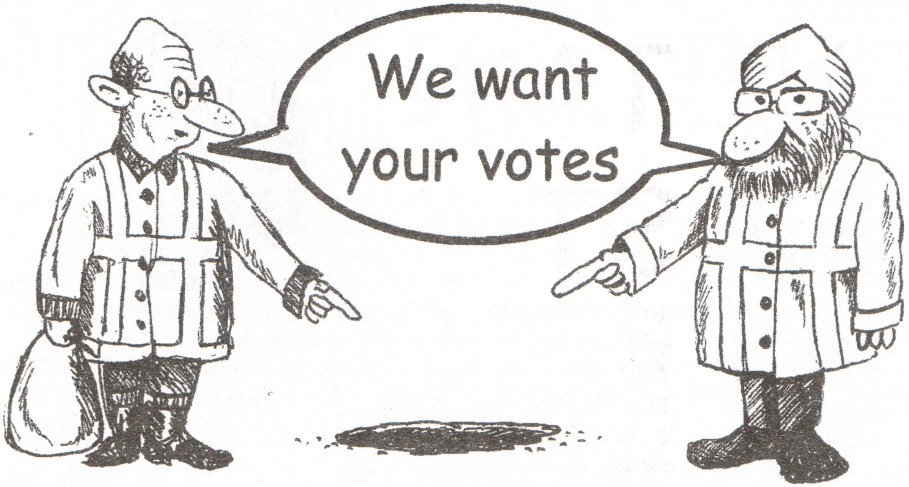
Anyway, BF have now crossed that hurdle and they have also gained a few new quality recruits. Several ex-UKIP members have defected to BF including David Moreland (ex-UKIP home affairs spokesman) and also James Cole, who was a senior UKIP activist from Swansea UKIP. Things are looking bright for BF in 2022.

The North of England BF organiser, Ashley Simon, is confident she will be the first BF councillor, she also has high hopes of being the first BF MP. In fact BF are confident that they will be fielding 50 candidates in the local elections in 2022.

It is not yet clear if Golding will be one of the candidates standing, but it's worth remembering that Golding has been elected as a councillor once before.

Golding won a by-election in Swanley St Mary's ward in Sevenoaks back in Feb 2009. Swanley was a safe Labour seat, yet 27 year old Golding won the seat for the BNP. At the time it was said that the BNP could never win a seat in the South.

But the BNP won it much to the annoyance of Labour. Sadly the victory was short lived as Coun Golding could not be bothered to attend meetings or take part in other council business, hence after a short period of time he was removed from the council which is something that should not be forgotten.



IT may seem like early doors at the moment, but the Coventry local elections are on the horizon. Facebook is awash with all the potential candidates raising their profiles with various community projects. Pointing at pot holes and posing with litter pickers with a freshly speared Quavers packet for the perfect photo opportunity. And why do they always feel the need to wear a high viz jacket?

Anyway, the coming elections will as expected have the usual full sheet of Labour and Tory candidates across the 18 wards of Coventry.

But who else will be throwing their political hat into the ring? Will the Lib Dems be putting up? Will UKIP be making a return to the local political battle ground? And what of Dave Nellist and his Bolshevik buddies? Will they be out waving the red flag on their way to another abysmal result? The Greens may well also make an appearance on the ballot paper.

And of course Coventry also has it's very own home grown political party with the Coventry Citizens Party (CCP). CCP rose from the ashes of the former Coventry UKIP group led by then chairman Ian Rogers. Founded in 2019 and also registered with the Electoral commission in the same year, CCP define themselves as neither left or right. They have many policies including a major shake up at the Council House along with many other radical plans which sets them apart from from the other parties. Last year 2021 they fielded a full slate of candidates and averaged 2% to 5% across the City. They also managed a whooping 21% in Binley & Willenhall with Paul Cowley getting 817 votes.

This year CCP will be standing again in all 18 wards. However, former leader and founding member Ian Rogers resigned at the party's annual meeting in Oct 2021 due to health reasons. CCP Members have now elected Cameron Baxter as party leader alongside Marcus Fogden as second officer for the next 12 months. Cameron said: "I am pleased to be leading a fantastic team of community champions including Paul Cowley, Sian Jones and Sunny Braitch. "I am also excited, at 20 years old, to possibly be the youngest ever party leader in the UK.

For more information on CCP including membership and and potentially standing as a candidate visit their web site or find them on facebook.

HOTEL CALIFORNIA

Already in 2022 at least 60 migrants have crossed the Channel to reach the land of milk and honey. By the time you read this that number will be well into the hundreds, if not higher. Now there are a number of good reasons to want to leave France, not least their diminutive President who stamps his feet like a toddler every time things don't go his way, but it cannot be denied it's a safe country to live. So why do the migrants risk their lives (and as we saw last year it is a massive risk, in spite of the best efforts of the RNLI) to get to Great Britain?

Over 28,000 made the journey in 2021 alone. Yes, the traffickers must take a large part of the blame. They're unscrupulous in taking money off people and making promises about Britain, whilst not caring tuppence about them once they set sail in their dinghies. But there's more to it than meets the eye. During the Summer of 2020, whilst Britons were adjusting to new and unheard of restrictions on our freedoms, boatloads of migrants started to arrive illegally on our beaches under the noses of the British public who were rather preoccupied with other matters. Why were the Government not doing anything about it? Why were the press not reporting it? Answer: because the one man who was actually reporting live from the beaches of the South coast was Nigel Farage. Smelling salts at the ready for those in the home office!

Goodness gracious, no one in the present Government could possibly be seen to be supporting Mr Farage. Far easier to pretend that it wasn't happening and that Nigel was just whipping up a bit of racialism. It was this initial inaction by the Government to nip the problem in the bud that sent out the message to migrants across the world that if they came here illegally they wouldn't be challenged. But what else was drawing people here like iron filings to a magnet?

Could it be the fact that last year out of 28,000 illegal migrants the Government deported only five? Or could it be that when they arrive they are kept in four star hotels? (Once all the existing guests have been booted out!) This has become the defining legacy of the whole situation. With the numbers arriving in the thousands, where else are they all going to stay?

The left-wing celebrity do-gooders won't take them! Maybe that's why it's proposed to build thousands of houses on the greenbelt? When the army barracks were used migrants complained about the conditions, so much so that they burnt the place down!

These were conditions that were good enough for our armed forces and surely better than the war-torn countries they were fleeing. Have you noticed that the majority coming here are young men of fighting age? It's understandable that women and children want to come here (Especially if we've invaded their country!), but why aren't the men fighting to defend their homeland? Many also lie about their age and in the most extreme circumstances men of 40 are put into classrooms with girls of 15. What do you think happens when the parents complain? That's right, they get accused of being racist. The hotel industry has suffered greatly during the lockdowns, so it was ingenious of some of the larger chains to offer their rooms to the Government, at exorbitant prices! All paid for by you and me. Televisions, swimming pools, gyms and three meals a day. Alright for some, but does this really solve the problem?

It's clear that the numbers coming over are unsustainable. The Government's failure to address this problem means their poll ratings are falling and tensions are rising amongst the British people. But why is nothing being done? As this is now a lucrative business perhaps the hotel bosses are donating large sums to the Conservatives to keep turning a blind eye, but you'd have to be very cynical to think that! The only other explanation is cowardice. Frightened of what the die-hard lefties will think if the immigrants are deported, never mind the fact that this week an illegal immigrant was jailed for assaulting two women on a beach in Bournemouth. But there's no point in trying to deport immigrants if we just allow them to sail into the country unchallenged. As the Eagles say in their famous song Hotel California -

"You can never leave." I wonder if the immigrants ever will!

WELCOME TO RUGBY

Twinned with heroin and cocaine

RUGBY in recent years has like many other Towns and Cities been blighted with the curse of drugs. So much so that it is often referred to as "Drugby". A recent news story just about summed up the sad situation, and it's s sad reflection of the state of this country today. Stacey Grubb is a single mother of 3 young children, aged 1,9 and 10. At the time of the offence she was pregnant with the youngest child. As is often the case there is no mention of the father or fathers of these children. This is standard fare when reporting on such cases. Almost as if these events of immaculate conception are now commonplace. Anyway, in July 2019 she was arrested after allowing her house to be used as a dispatch centre for class A drugs, namely heroin and crack cocaine.
Two drug dealers both aged 21 from Birmingham and Wolverhampton were caught dealing from Grubb's kitchen in Rugby. Corey Campbell and Zillion Brook, both black and known drug dealers were arrested. Charges were brought, however for some strange reason charges against Brook were dropped, probably because he was facing more serious charges for another arrest. In interview Campbell, despite his young age, was clued up enough to adopt the usual "no comment" mantra during interview. However, this was to no avail as he was found guilty and sentenced to 26 months in prison. Grubb pleaded guilty to allowing her house to be used for drug dealing. She claimed she did not know that her kitchen was being used for drug dealing even though there was scales and packets of drugs prepared and packaged on the kitchen table, though she did confess that she "suspected" something was going on.
She was spared jail and was given a four-month jail term suspended for a year.
In court it was revealed that Grubb was a regular cannabis smoker, but had cut down on her intake. Which is of course good news for her young children.
It was also revealed that that Campbell was at the time living on the streets, but was spending some time with his grandmother. There was no mention of his parents and one can only assume that they have been absent for some time from his life which certainly does not help the situation. The whole sad saga is not purely one of drug use, but rather a sad reflection of Britain today. The total morale collapse of family, community and society. The liberal dream has become our nightmare.

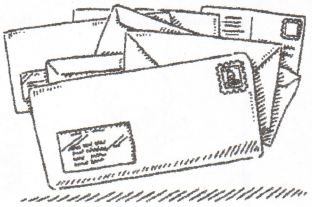
Points of View



"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD"

The letters on this page are taken from local news papers and are not necessarily the views of the Supplement. The letter writers may or may not hold any known political affiliation. They are reproduced here purely as articles of interest and the Supplement newsletter and editor does not endorse nor condemn their content.

George "The Spiv" Jones writes about the asylum crisis. Paul Sheehan wants to say goodbye to Boris. Then we have a rare quartet of letters from Lynch, Bembridge, Foster & Finch. Kevin starts the debate followed by a retort from Phyllis who in turn gets a retort from Fred and also from Eric. Interesting and amusing and a fine example of the fine art of letter writing.

Deport bogus refugee invaders.

It has been proposed that British armed forces could be used to guard Eastern Euro borders against a Putin invasion.

Would it not be better that our own army and Navy guard our own borders such as Dover and Deal etc against "refugee" invaders many of whom have travelled thousands of miles to get to the UK and it's monetary benefits for large Asian families.

To traverse thousands of miles to the UK is hardly "refugee" status, the tag "refugee" applied to their nearest border surely and in any case most of them have no UK passport so they are illegal – full stop.

Stop and deport, full stop!

Your time is up

COME in Boris Johnson, your time is up. Enough is enough.

This country needs real leadership.

Why on earth should the public comply with the restrictions put in place by his government after the recent revelations of the behaviour of the Prime Minister and his staff behind closed doors?

Johnson may think that he sees light at the end of the tunnel, but for him it is a train coming the other way.

Unfair now to judge people of their time

THE statue of Bristol benefactor and slave trader Edward Coulson (sic) was pulled down by locals who admitted to the deed.
The decision of the jury to acquit them could well encourage the following.
"Bomber Harris" organised the 1000 bomber raids on Germany in the Second World War causing huge casualties including a firestorm which destroyed Dresden killing 25,000 people. His statue was unveiled in 1992 by the Queen Mother. How would we react to a party of young Germans tearing down his statue and throwing it into the Thames?
Or indeed a similar party of Argentinians defacing the 1982 Liberation Memorial in Port Stanley which recognises the sacrifice of 255 British lives saving the Falkland Islands from enemy occupation? Coulson, Harris and indeed, Churchill, were people of their time and their views and actions cannot fairly be judged by modern standards or thinking.

Students took brave stance against slavery

THE letters page recently featured a letter from a writer who appeared to question the not guilty verdict of the four brave students who removed the Edward Colston statue.
My granddaughter studied at Bristol and happens to know personally two of the students involved. I can confirm that all four involved will go down in history for their brave stance against slavery and addressing the reluctance of many to make amends for this countries colonial crimes.
Thankfully the Judge has viewed the case through fair and just eyes and arrived at the right decision. Sadly this country still has a long way to go with it's fight against racism, but milestones like this show we are making progress.

Let's deal with now not crimes of past

A RECENT letter tells us of the brave stance taken by Bristol students against slavery. Perhaps mob rule might be more appropriate. Whilst the actions will make some take pride in their achievement, looking back on anything is just so easy when done with a degree in hindsight. It is so easy to look back at history. There are many examples of slavery in the past, but what concerns me more is the slavery that goes on today. The past has gone, but people are suffering today.
Students need to open their eyes to the way that workers are treated today, and the unfairness that has an affect on so many loyal hard working employees. If students really wish to make a stance they could try highlighting the salaries of all nursing and other hospital workers. Society owes a huge debt to all the NHS workers, as we try to move out of this pandemic.

Fred Foster, Coventry.

No justification

DOES P. N. Bembridge, letters 17th Jan, not realise that slavery ended over 200 years ago.
And that many people in the UK helped to end it.
There is no justification for a mob of vandals destroying things they disagree with.
There is a way to go about this in a modern society other than mob rule.

Locked in a Permanen state with covid

Can I remind readers that statistically, covid remains a serious risk only to the over 80s who have a history of other medical conditions. Only 5% of hospital covid deaths are solely covid deaths. Had covid emerged in the 19th century it would barely of registered as a major infection. It may simply have been classed as just another flu. Covid will always be with us. It will adapt to whatever vaccines we throw at it. Some people now argue for a new lockdown to contain the latest mutation, even though vulnerable people have had three vaccine jabs.

If this happens then the same argument could be used to justify a lockdown when any new mutant strain arrives, and come they will. We would be in a state of permanent war against covid. In his book 1984, Orwell predicted a world which was in a state of permanent war with itself. He never predicted that the generals would be mathematical modellers and their leaders health officials.

It is quite possible that lockdowns cause more indirect deaths than covid itself. These lockdown deaths are not quantifiable but the economic costs of lockdown are quantifiable. National debts are rising in all countries with the greatest damage being done in countries which already have weak economies.

Britain, Germany and France may be able to pursue a lockdown policy for a number of years, but whether Spain, Turkey or Italy can is another matter.

This never ending covid war is starting to resemble WW1. In WW1 the mantra was: "One more push and it will all be over". Now it's: "One more lockdown and it will all be over". The German army was not beaten in WW1. It was the economic collapse of it's weaker allies, Turkey, Bulgaria and Austria, that forced the armistice on Germany. As with WW1, it may only be the economic collapse of financially weak countries that will finally force the end of the covid war. Time will tell.

THE relentless flow of interlopers and chancers crossing the English channel shows no signs of abating. Obviously its all one way traffic as this government dangles the carrot to lure more and more to these shores with the promise of benefits and much more.

It wasn't that long ago that these bogus asylum seekers were bobbing across the waves on inflatable beds, large sauce pans and anything else that looks like it has the potential to float. Now, however the carriage of choice is sturdy blow up boats with powerful out board motors, many of which are of military quality.

Such is the growth and profitability in people smuggling, and all of course indirectly encouraged and assisted by our very own RNLI. The whole illegal process of people smuggling is now safer than ever, and yet in recent months there has been an increase in fatalities. We will probably never know the true numbers of chancers who make it to these shores, and we will never know how many end up as shark food.

What we do know is that the screaming liberal brigade all chant the same old tired mantra of, "these poor souls are so desperate, they will risk their lives to get to Britain".

But is crossing the English channel really such a perilous and dangerous task? In 1875 Matthew Webb became the first person to officially swim the English channel. He went onto attempt to swim the Whirlpool Rapids at the base of Niagra Falls in 1883, but sadly died in the attempt aged 35. Over the years there have been many who have successfully swam the English channel including, Gertrude Ederle who in 1926 became the first female to swim the channel. The oldest swimmer was 73 year old Otto Thaning a white South African who swam it in 2014, and the youngest swimmer is Thomas Gregory from the UK who swam the channel back in 1988 aged 11.

Two of the more amazing swimmers are John Maclean who was the first paraplegic to swim the channel in 1998, followed in 2010 by quadruple amputee Phillippe Croizon who completed the 21 miles of water despite having lost all four limbs in an electrical accident. Now I'm not suggesting that illegal refugees start swimming across the waves to Old Blighty, though it has already happened unsuccessfully in the past.

But the evidence is there proving that with the right planning and preparation it can be achieved safely, and of course with the benefit of a modern powerful dingy, plus RNLI back up, there should be practically zero risk to life and limb as they skim across the waves on their way to the land of milk & honey. The only danger they face is of their own making as too many try to cram into the boats. Adding to the situation there is no civilities or etiquette with these people as it's dog eat dog with people of this ilk.

You won't hear a band playing on regardless as was the case when the Titanic went down. Rather you'll see grown men climbing over others and in some cases throwing the weak over broad to maintain their own safe passage. And once on British soil the real nightmare begins for us as they disappear into thin air. Who they are, what they are and where they go no one knows. But as the great man once said

"It is like watching a nation busily engaged in heaping up its own funeral pyre".

JUKE BOX JURY (WOKE)

POLITICAL correctness is a cancer that is creeping in and infiltrating all aspects of our lives. It seems like half the population is going out of their way to be offended by something or other, and the other half are going all out to apologise and atone for their PC crimes. The world of entertainment has practically been muted down as individuals tone down, or rather dumb down their content to the point that it no longer entertains or serves any purpose other than to tick PC boxes. Everyone is now walking on eggs shells so as not to offend some over sensitive group or individual.

But walking the PC tight rope now is not enough to escape the PC Vultures. As many misdemeanours from many years ago are dug up for scrutiny. Many old long forgotten tweets or shared FaceBook posts come back to haunt many a celebrity.

All areas of the entertainment world seem to be affected, regardless of how big a star they are. Irish band the Pogues famously a few years ago came a cropper with the use of the word "faggot" in their song "Fairy tale of New York". You would think that a 'bad ass band' like the Pogues would of made a stand, but sadly they capitulated and changed the word from faggot to maggot to appease the LGBT community, but this could now possibly inadvertently offend the fishing community!

Even the Greatest Rock n Roll band of all time fell foul of the PC Vultures. The Rolling Stones recorded the song Brown Sugar in 1969 and released it in 1971, that's 51 years ago. For over half a century the song was sold and sung with no issues and no known cases of descendents of slavery crying themselves to sleep over the lyrics. But then in 2021 all of a sudden the song becomes the "Spawn of Satan" as every man and his dog is suddenly offended by the references to slavery and misogyny. There are many accounts of what the lyrics are really all about, and even though Mick Jagger actually wrote the song, even he is unsure what the lyrics are all about. But the song was shamefully dropped from the Stones set list in case any more sensitive souls were offended by it. But one of the strangest and most recent examples of this PC purge on popular music features Elvis Costello who actually banned his own song himself. Maybe he jumped before he was pushed, who knows?

But Mr Costello has instructed radio stations and disc jockeys etc not to play his 1979 hit "Olivers Army". The song is actually about the troubles in Northern Ireland and is well written and researched. But the song does contain the dubious lyrics

"All it takes is one itchy trigger, One more widow one less white nigger".

Which is enough to trigger any woke white liberal. Strangely Mr Costello has not in all these years been pulled up for the use of the nigger word, but I do think this is more due to him being part of the liberal left music scene with the likes of Billy Bragg and Rock against Racism etc. Ironically the phrase "White nigger" in this context is a reference to Catholics in Northern Ireland and has no connection to black culture.

All in all it's a bit of a "thin ice" scenario for Mr Costello and in his wisdom he opted to go public and ban his own song. Whether or not he still cash's in the royalty cheques from the song is as yet unknown. Now there is one other lyric in Mr Costello's song that seems to get over looked. It is the line in the third verse that says...

"London is full of Arabs, We could be in Palestine".

All rather confusing and contradictory, my advice is. If your white and want to play in a band, best to just play instrumental songs.

You never hear of the Shadows getting into any PC bother...

MARK TAYLOR RIP

IF politicians were elected on looks alone, Mark Taylor would have been elected years ago. He had that classic well groomed Tory look and presence about him. A constant healthy glow and a bouffant head of hair that would put Michael Portillo's barnet to shame. Always immaculately dressed with not a hair out of place Mark had the look for political success. Mark knew how the political world worked and had an uncanny knack of getting media coverage. Never camera shy he was often on the telly and also radio. From Question Time to local radio he managed to get his ten pence worth in. Mark soon put his political skills to work when he joined UKIP and was soon promoted to Coventry Branch chairman. He was there when UKIP had there finest hour in Coventry during the 2014 local elections. UKIP was making waves and in Coventry they polled some excellent votes. Sadly none elected, but many good third places and some very close second places as well.

The following year 2015 UKIP was eyeing up the Parliamentary seats. Mark was the obvious choice for the Coventry South seat and rightly so. However, UKIP HQ had the bright idea of parachuting in a out of town "celebrity" candidate. Pop Preacher George Hargreaves was put forward. As a black man maybe UKIP thought it was a good idea to show how inclusive they were. But the wheels soon fell off when it was revealed that Hargreaves was a bit of a crank. It was found that he was anti gay, anti the Welsh flag as it is "Satanic" etc. His only redeeming quality was that he was pro the death penalty, however that was not a UKIP policy. Hargreaves was soon dropped and Mark was re-invited to stand, which he did. But the damage was done and Mark quite rightly soon moved on and the following year joined the Coventry Tory group. But this union was short lived as Mark was disillusioned with the Tory benefit cuts. Mark stayed engaged with local issues, but did not stand again. The news in late December 2021 that Mark had passed away came as a shock to many. The local paper reported that he passed on 18th Dec after a short illness, his funeral was held in Coventry on 14th Jan. Mark will be missed by his wife and family and all that knew him.

Mark Taylor RIP.

YOUR TALENTS NEEDED

The Supplement has been in print for approx 15 years now. As some of our more longer serving readers will remember it used to be published along side the Voice of Freedom newspaper. Sadly VOF has long since ceased to be. Hence the Supplement is now produced as a newsletter in it's own right. In the past I have aimed to get an issue out every two months, issue dates vary depending on what is going on in the political world.

However there have been times when there has been a lapse between issues of more than two months. As you may of noticed the frequency has improved with the past 3 issues with an issue every month.

I am hoping to maintain this situation and produce, hopefully, 12 per year. To do this I need more content to fill the pages. Thankfully I am now getting more input from readers which is taking the burden off me and also making the Supplement a broader and better read. Remember this publication is quite unique in that it is 100% exempt from censorship and political correctness. All articles on any subject are welcome as long as they are relevant. I know that there are many readers out there involved in various groups and movements who could put pen to paper and submit a piece. Remember this publication is not my own private platform, it is for everyone to use and share and promote their views in what ever fashion they see fit. So get those creative juices flowing and submit an article soon.

Meanwhile many thanks to all who have renewed their subs or donated stamps etc. Sadly we still have a few in arrears who hopefully will renew soon, however if you have no intention of renewing please let me know so I can cancel your subscription as it just wastes funds.

Thanks for your support
